Highlights of Our Learning

Training. Person-centered thinking training material teaches sound critical thinking skills that can be used by everyone in the agency. All TCRC staff have attended two-day training on Person-centered Thinking and these trainings were also open to families, service providers and other community partners. Recently, the Board of Directors and Area Board IX participated in a briefer version of the training. Person-centered thinking training is being incorporated into our new employee training to ensure that all staff have a common understanding of the concepts and tools. As a follow-up to the training, we are now also teaching staff and service providers to coach others in the use of the skills with the goal of supporting consistent, habitual use of the tools throughout the community.

Language. We are mindfully working to eliminate labels and to use respectful language when referring to people receiving services. We are in the process of revising our policies and procedures to eliminate the term "consumer" and other labels. In this work, we are guided by materials developed by the San Luis Obispo chapter of People First and have adopted their suggestions for our internal practices. That group has provided a one-hour training to TCRC employees to ensure that the message is clear to all. Additionally, it has been incorporated into our New Employee Welcome so that new staff will also understand the importance of respectful language. We are now in the process of changing the name of our largest department, currently called "Consumer Services", to be consistent with the message.

Technology support. Our intranet is now being used to facilitate work done by the service coordination staff. Most of the forms that they use are available on the intranet, organized in a fashion designed by them. Forms are linked to relevant policies and procedures for reference. Many of the forms used by staff have been revised, based upon their suggestions, to create a smoother flow of work. Having the forms on the intranet allows us to ensure that the most current, approved forms are used by staff. Material used to prepare for planning team meetings has also been automated to further save time for staff. Additionally, the person-centered thinking tools and reference materials are available on the intranet for their use. We are working with providers to develop "one plan", a document that can serve the needs of everyone on the planning team.

Strategic Plan. The TCRC Strategic Performance Plan for 2007-2009 was developed by and with input from a broad spectrum of stakeholders in the community using person-centered thinking techniques as well as other strategies. The plan specifies that the agency will continue with person-centered thinking activities, particularly in the area of services to school-aged children and as we build on relationships with educators.

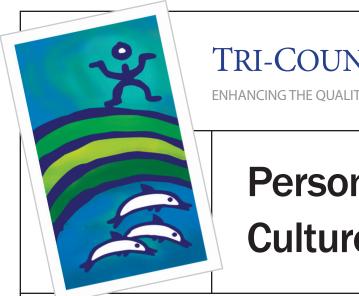

Systemic Changes. We are working with community partners to change the service delivery system to be more responsive to the needs of people receiving services. SB 1270 provides a recent example of that collaborative approach. With the implementation of this legislation, employment and meaningful day services will be more available in our communities. We are also participating in collaborative efforts to implement a system of care for Early Childhood Mental Health services and in the development of an assessment center for children under the age of five.

Evaluation. Evaluation of the use of person-centered thinking is important if it is to be supported systemically, and to this end, we have approached UCSB to develop an evaluation process with us. Helen Sanderson, a renowned leader of Essential Lifestyle Planning in the United Kingdom, has recently published her research supporting the notion that person-centered thinking is sound, evidenced-based practice.

These efforts have all been done in collaboration with our community partners. They have trained with us, planned with us, and are working on grant applications with us. We are all committed to continuing this work with an eye toward achieving better outcomes for the people we serve. Our change process will continue indefinitely as we will always be aligning and realigning, and striving to improve. As we work toward preserving our core purpose and values, it is with mindful attention to the need to align and realign with that core purpose.

Approximately 2 years ago, the Tri-Counties Regional Center (TCRC) Leadership Team made a commitment to fully support person-centered thinking and planning at the individual and organizational level as a means of enhancing support for every person served by the agency. In this effort, we are closely examining our policies, procedures and practices to identify where we can be more effective and efficient, using a person-centered perspective. This organizational change initiative has changed the way we operate internally and externally.

Why are we engaged in this effort? It is based in a deep and passionate commitment to the work that we do. Central to our thinking is a belief that the people we serve and their families deserve nothing less than the best and greatest we have to offer. Additionally, advocates and self advocates are exercising and assuming leadership roles like never before: They are taking responsibility ORGANIZATION for what matters to them and are demanding great from us, rather than just settling for good. A "good" organization in our system is one that consistently and successfully meets basic assurances, i.e., those clear, non-negotiable requirements around keeping Ш people safe, healthy, and protecting their basic rights. A "great" organization is one that achieves the right balance between basic assurances and a person-centered thinking culture – a culture that incorporates the sum of the ideas, skills, actions and practices that support each person's vision of their future.

There has been a noticeable shift in emphasis among those who receive services from the regional center system. The change is from a "consumer" mind set to an "informed and active citizen" mind-set. Increasingly, as people tell us what they expect, it is that meaningful and individualized results are paramount. Person-centered thinking (PCT) and planning is essential to achieving these outcomes.

At TCRC, we piloted systematic and systemic person-centered thinking and planning with two service coordination teams. The purpose was to more thoroughly and deeply test the implementation of person-centered thinking, planning and supports over a period of time to learn about the challenges and supports needed in 0 successfully implementing personcentered thinking and planning at a systemic level. We also formed a task force to review recommendations from the pilot for implementation throughout the agency, as appropriate. Membership of the task force started with TCRC staff and management and now has been expanded to include interested service providers and Area Board IX. Their principal purpose is to coordinate PCT efforts and initiatives throughout the organization and now in the community.
